

I should have the right to choose whether or not someone may enter my home, either physically or electronically (e.g. by phone). Indiana's telephone privacy law has given me the choice to implement this right. It would be improper and even unconstitutional for the federal government to remove this 4th amendment right. It is my desire that the FCC allow the Indiana telephone privacy law to remain in effect.